OSS Form 1593 (Rev. 11/3/43)

(22 (26731)

SETS-INQUART, ARTUR (sla'Ing'kvårt år'töre) July 2, 1892- 'German High Commissioner of The Netherlands commissioner there is Artur Seyss-Inquart, an intellectual-looking man whose disdainful expression may be due to the fact that is can hardly see without his spectacles. A decree of March 21, 1941 gives him authority to set up marchinery to execute summary justice—shooting for serious offenses—and to set aside Netherlands offenses—and to set aside Netherlands offenses—and to set aside Netherlands offenses—and to riots, strikes and "conspiracies against German suppossible future repetition of the riots, strikes and "conspiracies against German supposition of the past: Nasi soldiers have been thrown into Dutch canals, among other things. On the other hand, the number of executions and mysterious murders of anti-Fasciets that have taken place in Holland makes one wonder, a little, about the kind of "justice" dispensed point to the docree.

Much water has gone under the bridge since the day in May 1940 when Seyss-Inquart was inducted as German High Commissioner of The Netherlands. Then he announced that: "Dutch laws hitherto observed shall remain in force as far as possible, Dutch officials are to be the instruments of power in the new administration. The independence of legal jurisdiction is to be preserved. The German Army would rather have entered this land with its arm raised in friendly salute than with weapons in hand. We did not come here to oppress the people and to deprive the nation of its freedom."

Since that time the economy of The Natherlands has been almost completely incorporated into that of the Reich. Dutch cartle, hogs, butter reserves, tobacco, oil and factory stocks have been fast disappearing, as have Dutch workmen conscripted for manual labor in Germany. Living costs are up, wages down, and although food rationing is appearently less drastic than in Belgium, Hollanders are not the rosy-cheeked, well-fed people vicey once were. Comprehensive restrictions on all Jewish activities have reduced Jews to the status of persons merely tolerated in the country; they are even forbidden to eat kosher meat.

High Commissioner Seyss-Inquart can remember one country that the Germany Army actually entered "with its arm raised in friendly salute"—although with weapons not completely forgotten. That country was Austria, a country which he himself beiped betray to the Nazis. He is not an Austrian, however, but a Sudeten German, born on July 2, 1892 in Stanners near Iglan. Many of the associates of his youth later became leaders in the Czechoslovakian Nazi movement.

Segme-Inquart was 16 when he first went to Vienna to study at the University of Vienna and take his law degree there. During those years, at least, he had liberal leanings—even toyed with the idea of joining the Social Democratic Party. His law practice interrupted by the World War, he served on the Issuao front ustil discharged with a serious less wound which still makes him limp a little. Aucthor Catholic law student, Kurt Schuschnigg, had commanded the sector next to his; the two men continued their friendship. Schuschnigg, however, later joined the Christian Social Party, while Seyss-Inquart never openly belonged to any party until the days of the Fatherland Front.

Seyss-Inquart's history in the 1930's is an almost incredible Jekyll-and-Hyde story. One aspect is that of Schuse nigg's friend, a highly successful attorney with a large Jewish clientele, "a well-dressed man of aristocratic aspearance and impeccable manners," popular in Viennese society, married, with two children and an apple orchard in which he times great price. He frankly favors union with Germany but certainly never sympathizes openly with the Austrian National Socialist Party.

The other aspect is that of Hitler's secret Austrian representative (exactly when he had been converted to National Socialism is not certain). This man directs the agents of Nazi propagands and terror in Austria, se-cares for them satsports, residence permits, etc.; they exect at his home, they communicate with one another through him, in important matters the, rely on his judgment. It seems impossible that for vers no one should have discovered that the respectable attorney and the chief of the Mass Fifth Column were one and the same person, even though Seyss-Inquart was a man with a brilliant mind and memory and a talent for "adjusting his face and memory to the person with whom he was talking."

Some of the facts are particularly hard to believe. When in March 1933 Chancellor Dollfusa made himself dictator of Austria and created the authoritarian Austrian State both Minister Schuschnigg and Artur Seyss-Inquart were made members of the Austrian Corporate Council. Yet shortly before the assassination of Dollfuss by Austrian National Socialists, when Germany sent 80 specialists, when Germany sent 80 specialists into Austria to reorganize the outhouse National Socialist Party as an underground movement, the agents met safely at the home of Seyss-Inquart After the death of Dollfuss, Schuschnigg became Chancellor; Seyss-Inquart's only speech from the fact was a protest against Schuschnigg's attack on per-Germanism. Said Soys-Inquert, mildly: "To me that I am a German is just as important as that I am an Austrian; the time is past when we can afford to be divided into national groups." Yet at about this time he was winning over to the cause of National Socialism the organization of Austrian hotel progressors whose counsel he was—on the grounds that it would bring back their lest German tourist trade. And in 1935 he personally accessed to bring the Austrian Legion back across the border in small groups and hold it in readiness for a German invasion—a plan which later had to he abandoned.

After July 1936 a secr is Committee of Seven was established at No. 4 Teinfaltstrasse, Vienna with the purpose of protecting the Austrian Making a semilist and helping them indistrate into Schuschming's Fatherland Front. Seven-Inquart was a member. In Japaney 1838 No. 4 was raised, a plot for sevenities revealed and frustwated. Furthermore, when a Nasi terrorist was arrested Seyse-Inquart's address was found on him, as well as plans for an attack on the Chascollery. Nothing more inagemed to Seyan-Inquart than a crossexamination by the Prefect of Police. But the emissus discovery, with the attendant possibility of a purge by Schuschnigg, made Hither decide to accelerate his plans.

Tetrency 1998, with 1998 the 1998, to Austrian independence growing steadily worse, Schuschnigg's trusted advisor Sayss-Inquart (with the help of German Ambassador Von Papen [see sketch this issue]) managed to persuade him to go to Berchtesgaden and try to come to some kind of an understanding with Hitler. It turned out to be a peculiar sort of understanding. Hitler delivered an ultimatum whose terms Schuschnigg was forced to accept two days later. In it he demanded political amnesty and freedom for the Austrian National Socialists and a reconstructed Schuschnigg Cabinet, including Seyss-Imquart as Minister of the Interior with complete authority over the Austrian police apparatus. The alternative was—a German invasion.

"Immediately upon receiving his new post from the bewildered Schuschrigg, Seyss-Inquart flew to Berlin to get further instructions from Hitler. Back in Vienne, one of his first moves was to grant the Nazis of Styria the right to wear swastikas and shout "Heil Hitler!" He also made plans to visit other provinces to lay the foundation for an undisturbed organization of the Nasi movement throughout Austria." (A more surprising act was his order that 11 former Socialist members of the illegal Defense Corps be reinstated in Viennale. Fine Description ():

members of the illegal Defense Cosps be reinstated in Vignosia, Five Descriment !!

On March 9 Schuschnigg announced that a plebiscite would be beld on March 13 by which the people of Austria would be permitted vote for or against incorporation in the Reich. Hitler, outraged, presented a second ultimatum on March 11: the plobiscite must be called off or the Nazis would march. That same evening, with all sorte of rumors going around the city, Schuschnigg's sad voice was heard over the loud-speaker: there would be no plebiscite. Immediately afterward inquart, not so saddened, spoke. He ordered the Austrian Army to make no resistance. What isliowed everyone knows. Schuschnige resigned; for the moment Seys. Inquart besame Chancellor and Minister of Defense, and invited Hitler to send troops in to "preserve order." "Austria is free. Austria is National Socialist. . . One People, One Reich, One Leader. Heil to our Leader. Heil Hitler!"

Hitler was more than prompt in accepting the invitation. On March 12 Austria was amexed. Schuschnigg saw his strange friend Seyss-Inquart next at the head of a band of Storm Troopers. Seyss-Inquart ordered the former Chancellor to remain in his apartment, stationed an armed gaspa there, and finally announced that he would be tried for treason. Yet, according to Oswald Dutch, Seyss-Inquart, too, was a "deceived deceiver." As soon as Hitler moved into Vienna he was given a position subordinate to Gouloiter Bürckel—named Statthalter of the Ostmark.

Seyas-Inquart remained in obscurity until, in March 1939, Bürekal and he began the Nazi campaign for Slovak "independence" with the aid of the Vienna radio station. In that same year he became Minister without Portfolio in the Reich Gövernment, and after Germany took Poland in September 1939 he was honored with another post: Deputy Governor of the occupied territory. Now the same who wented to govern Austria is governing the stubborn Dutch. According to Ludwig Lore, he says Holland must be brought to such a state of obedience that if the German Army should leave, the Dutch would actually ask it to return—no one must be left to oppose the Nazi rule.
